

Project Title:

“Faith Development in the College Years and its Impact on Identity and Choices”

Abstract:

The purpose of this project is to trace the faith development of a select group of Creighton University undergraduate students (approximately 70) over the course of their four years at the University and how that faith impacts their self-understanding and decision-making. Both quantitative and narrative information will be gathered through surveys conducted once each semester, allowing deeper insight into how the understanding of faith and the ways it impacts identity and choices changes over those four years.
