Lack of funds puts fine arts building on hold

Editor,

I think readers of the Creightonian may have gotten a mistaken impression from the front-page story on the proposed fine and performing arts center.

It is true that a fine and performing arts center is a top priority here at Creighton. But there is still much work to be done before we can go ahead with the project.

The biggest obstacle is the estimated $10 million needed to fund the construction. As yet, we have not secured a donor or donors to help us pay for the project.

Several architecture firms are working on the proposed designs for the structure. When complete, the university and artists’ conceptions of the building in fund-raising efforts.

Mike Leighton
Vice President
University Relations