Sibling artists Susan R. Lawler and Wayne J. Hoffman will present a brother-sister art show next week at the Lied Education Center for the Arts.

The exhibit opens Oct. 11 and continues through Nov. 12 in the Lied Center’s Art Gallery.

Lawler, an adjunct lecturer in the theology department, will be displaying her landscape photographs alongside pieces by her brother Hoffman, a professor of collage and painting at Santa Barbara City College in Santa Barbara, Calif.

Lawler became interested in photography in 1992, after taking a class from the Rev. Michael Flecky, S.J., associate professor of fine arts at Creighton.

This is the first time she has done a display with her brother. She said there were some difficulties arranging the show.

“The difficult thing is putting different mediums together and finding which will look good,” Lawler said.

Lawler will display approximately 30 pictures, including black and white photographs and blueprint cyanotype prints. Images include landscapes from Ireland, England and Portugal as well as the United States.

Both Lawler and Hoffman have similar beliefs concerning the meaning of art: beauty.

“In these works, I have attempted to combine color, shape, composition, texture and feeling to create an image of beauty,” Hoffman said.
