Summer Heat

Eight hours unrolling wire where barbs mark the miles and pounding posts in Nebraska heat force our bodies fit. Sweat polishes our burnished bronze skin, our thin work shirts, stained black with creosote, clings to hard muscles and stings your eyes to a blueness that beats out the bare, brazen sky.

By Whitney Jenkins