Welcome to the pilot project of the UniDiversity Online Educational Experience!

Our goal for this project is to provide an easily accessible diversity experience to the whole university—faculty, staff, and ultimately, students. This has been a work in progress, both with creating the framework and working with the technology. As you have volunteered to be part of this pilot, we are interested in your response to this online experience. Here are a few things for your consideration before you begin:

- There are four modules of varying lengths that add up to slightly more than an hour. You can come and go as you please, and complete them at your convenience.

- As you move through the modules, perhaps keep a piece of paper by your side to jot down notes about several aspects:
  - Content: Does it make sense? Do you feel like you’ve learned something? Was the content helpful?
  - Presentation: There are a variety of tools that we tried to include to keep people engaged and interested. Did they work or were they distracting? Were activities that you were asked to do interesting or too elementary? Was there anything you found frustrating or ineffective for you?

- Upon completion of the four modules, please fill out the survey that’s provided below. Feel free to provide helpful feedback—that’s what we need!

Future developments include a fifth module that will bring everything together, with experiential activities that help apply the framework to real life. In addition, we have a student working on short videos about diversity issues on campus. One film is completed, with interviews of the moderator and students within the Gender Sexuality Alliance (GSA) student organization, resulting in a very powerful video about diversity challenges. We have a number of interviews scheduled throughout the summer and fall with faculty, staff, and students that highlight academic work, research, or personal diversity experiences. We’re hopeful that these developments will enhance what is already there.

Please try to complete the modules and survey by June 15. Our goal is to launch by August 2011. So, thank you again for your willingness to participate, and we look forward to your feedback.
