Harold Good's "An Unfinished Journey" Rev. Harold Good lecture. He is visiting from his home in Northern Ireland. Back in Northern Ireland, Rev. Good demonstrates a lifetime commitment to peace, justice, and reconciliation. He is particularly known for his ministry on the streets of Northern Ireland. It is here that he displayed both physical and spiritual courage in working to reconcile the Protestant and Catholic communities. With cultural and political identities clashing, Rev. Good and his ministry worked to build bridges between the two communities, urging the end to violent action and reaction. With an emphasis on the importance of faith and using hope as a guiding principle during this difficult time, Good was able to bring peace to Northern Ireland after years of trauma. There will be a reception with beverages and dessert immediately following the lecture. Sponsored by the Werner Institute (2 Units)
