

SAC Feedback Submissions – January 2020

I have recently been the subject of personal and potentially financial deception and fraud perpetrated by [information removed]. A great proportion of [the] communication originates from [a] creighton.edu email. As a practicing Catholic, I extended more trust than reasonable given [this person's] long-term association with a Jesuit University. Please review [this person's] emails and protect [others] from this devastating experience. Thank you in advance for your attention to this matter.

The Council forwarded this message to DoIT. Note that there was a specific name mentioned in the question which was included when the message was forwarded to DoIT. Individuals are encouraged to exercise caution when opening any email communication. Please forward suspicious emails to abuse@creighton.edu.

It is apparent that Barnes and Nobles is complicit in price fixing for textbooks. Barnes and Nobles has prices that are, across the board, either marginally or much larger than the price from publishers or other reputable sellers new, used, and for rent. This is seemingly done so to prey on the scholarships offered by the university and those who are partnered with the university. Allowing this action by Barnes and Nobles is counter to both the Jesuit ideals and the ideals of higher education.

Message was forwarded for review. No response received as of the posting of this document.