Finding God in All Things

The Journal of Religion & Society is a refereed electronic journal that has been established to promote the cross-disciplinary study of religion and its diverse social dimensions through the publication of research articles, essays and opinions, review articles, and book reviews. The focus of the journal is American religions and Western religious traditions.

The journal is published by the Kripke Center at Creighton University to facilitate the exploration of religion and its role in society. It publishes peer-reviewed research for an international audience. It is open access to ensure the widest distribution and access to its publications.

The journal is edited by Ronald A. Simkins, the director of the Kripke Center; the editorial board consists of the many Faculty Associates of the center.
